

CHARGE "TILTED NOSES" CAUSED MURDER OF BOY

Advent of Fashionable Apartment Resented by Residents of Tenements.

TIP OVER THE ASH CANS.

Youth Is Shot in Melee; Janitor Accused Is Being Tried.

The trial of Frederick Hickey, superintendent of the Donac, an apartment house, Forty-ninth street and Eighth avenue, accused of shooting and killing Bartholomew Paluso, who lived in a neighboring tenement house, on May 15, went over to-day until Monday. It will be finished then.

The Donac was new last September. It was set down opposite the old Eighth avenue car barn, in a tenement neighborhood. The builders leased it before it was opened, to the Whitehouse Company, realty holders.

BOYS WRITE OUT ACCOUNTS FOR THE POLICE.

A remarkable feature of the prosecution, under Assistant District Attorney Frederick B. Mander, was the introduction of the evidence of eight boys, friends and playmates of Paluso. They were gathered up by the police after the shooting and taken to the police station. There they wrote out their accounts of what they saw.

Here, for instance, is the statement of one of them written without prompting within an hour of the death of young Paluso:

"I was standing with a friend right across the Auto Garage and I saw a boy throwing a piece of rag at Mr. Hickey then I seen Mr. Hickey taken a gun from his left side pocket and shot Bartholomew Paluso then I seen the boy taken over to the drug store. Yours truly Jos. Hando, 313 West 6th street."

Attorney Abraham Levy, with his associate counsel, Owen J. Bohan, called witnesses to show that the situation of the apartment house, in a crowded neighborhood, near the old car barn, caused constant collisions between the janitor and the boys, and made him irresponsibly angry. They tried to prove that he fired the shot to scare the boys away.

Tenants and business men who had stores in the first floor told how their windows had been pelted with garbage and broken, and how women had been insulted. They declared the prevailing evening language of the neighborhood was more like that of a fair market than of a fine residence district.

BIG CROWD GATHERS AND HEAVES OVER ASH CANS.

Witnesses told how a crowd had gathered about the Forty-ninth street side of the house, after two milk bottles had fallen with a crash from the ledge of an upper story window on the Forty-ninth street side. After that there had been demonstrations and shouts against Janitor Hickey, continuing with a rush on a row of ash cans near the apartment entrance. It ended with the hurling of all the cans into the roadway.

The shooting occurred a quarter of an hour later, while a lot of hoodlums were hanging around, yelling and throwing things at Hickey.

GETS A RENO DIVORCE. KISSES ALL HER FRIENDS.

Mrs. Anna Coyle Buckley of New York Runs Through Streets Shouting "I've Got It!"

RENO, Nev., Oct. 7.—The moment Mrs. Anna Coyle Buckley of New York was granted her divorce late yesterday from John David Buckley, she became so excited that she rushed from the court house and tore through the main streets waving her arms and yelling, "I've got it!" She hugged and kissed every friend she met. Then she headed a party of fellow "divorcees" to a cafe, where champagne flowed freely for several hours.

Mrs. Buckley has figured conspicuously in the social histories here ever since she came to Reno.

In New York she lived at the Ivy Court apartment, No. 125 West 125th street. She was married at St. Ann's Church, New York, by the Rev. J. E. J. Toy in 1912, scarcely from her husband twice, she said, and had not seen him in the last four years.

There were no children, and she asked for no alimony. She wanted to have her case heard in private, but the Judge refused. Her husband's father, she told the court, was an art collector connected with the Metropolitan Museum of Art at New York.

Her own father was said to be a retired member of the New York Police Department and wealthy. Her two brothers, Charles and William Coyle, were also described as wealthy. Mrs. Buckley said she passed for the Chicago-born girl of Max Weyl, the Washington artist.

Billie Burke to Bring "The Runaway" Next Week

Scotch Players Coming With "Bunt Pulls the Strings"—Fritzi Scheff to Appear in a New Comic Opera, "The Duchess"—George Beban Will Be Made a Star in "The Sign of the Rose."

MRS. Billie Burke comes to the Lyceum Theatre on Monday night with "The Runaway," an adaptation by Michael Morton of a French comedy by Pierre Veber and Henri de Guesne. The young heroine is under the guardianship of two maiden aunts living in one of the small Breton villages. A celebrated French painter who had a studio in Paris, is about to leave after a month's stay. One Sunday morning, while the good aunts are waiting for their summons to church, Colette has been out in the fields with her brushes, her canvas and paintbox. She has dared to paint a picture of the little four-year-old son of one of the shepherds. The aunts are scandalized when shown the canvas. To their mind Colette has committed an unpardonable sin. Vain are her explanations; the aunts decide that marriage is the only thing that will save the young girl from perdition. A marriage is arranged with the aid of the curé, but when she is wanted to ratify the engagement Colette is missing. She has run away to Paris, where her romance with the artist develops.

Among others in the company will be Aubrey Smith, George Howell, Henry Miller Jr., Morton Seltan and Josephine Morse.

A company composed almost entirely of Scotch actors will begin an engagement at the Comedy Theatre on Monday evening in a native comedy by Graham Moffat called "Bunt Pulls the Strings." The name of the play is intended to show the manner in which "Bunt" Biggar, the daughter of the local provision dealer and grocer in a small Scotch town, sets to rights all the comical and curious domestic tangles in which the family finds itself involved. The role of Bunt will be played by Molly Pearson, who was seen here as the slavey in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back." Other members of the company are Jean Cadeil, Amy Singleton, Margaret Nyblom, Marjory Davidson, Edmond Beresford, Campbell Collier, Sanderson Moffat, George Ingilston and Will Jaton.

Fritzi Scheff, at the Herald Square Theatre on Tuesday evening will introduce "The Duchess," a comic opera with music by Victor Herbert and book by Joseph Herbert and Harry B. Smith. Miss Scheff will be seen as a flower girl whose father wishes her to marry a wealthy count. Her own preference, however, is for a handsome young cavalry officer, and the complications which lead to her eventual marriage make up the incidents of the play. The supporting company will include George Anderson, John E. Hazard, Madison Smith, George Graham, David Lindsey, May Hooley, Lillian Spencer and Mildred Meade.

George Beban will appear in his own play, "The Sign of the Rose," at the Garrick Theatre beginning Wednesday night. William Griswold, a wealthy importer living in Gramercy Park, forgets to order a Christmas tree for his little girl and, going home the night before the holiday, meets Pietro Masena, an Italian laborer, on the street and asks him to carry home a tree he has just purchased at a nearby shop. The Italian takes the job and, carrying the tree to the Griswold home, stays there long enough to put it in position. While there he encounters the daughter of the household, and, being a lover of children, observes her closely. Philip Griswold, a scapegrace younger brother, has plotted to keep the little girl in hiding and claim a ransom in order to get money from his brother. After the Italian leaves it is discovered that baby Dorothy has been kidnapped, and suspicion is directed toward him.

In Mr. Beban's support will be Franklin Ritchie, George Probert, Carl Anthony, Marie Pavey, Edith MacBride and Lillian Hathaway.

The original Follies Bergere company in the "Hells" and "Gaby" and the ballet spectacle "Tombstones" will be seen at the Grand Opera House.

Harbort Bill in "The Boss" comes to the West End Theatre.

"Darkest Russia" will be played by the stock company at the Academy of Music.

The Princeton Theatre stock company will present "The Virginian."

At the Columbia Theatre will be "The President's Daughter."

"The Sign of the Rose" is announced for the Murray Hill Theatre.

"The Passing Parade" will be seen at the Lyceum.

Sam Devere's Barbershop will be at Minors' Eighth avenue theatre.

"Miss New York Jr." comes to Minors' Bronx theatre.

The "Ginger Girls" will be the attraction at Hurlitz & Beaman's.

"Billy's Tombstones," Bixley and Lerner, Tim Cronin, Smith and Campbell and the Layton Trio.

The bill at the American Music Hall will include W. S. Kelly, F. Collins and company, Ward Brothers, the Five Lunds, Trux and Campbell, the Tambo Duo, the Alfreds and the Orzav.

SECRET SERVICE ORDEAL FOR WOULD-BE CITIZENS.

Supreme Court Justice Townsend Souder made a record at Long Island City yesterday in admitting foreigners to citizenship. When the session ended, 127 candidates had been heard.

Of this number 57 were Germans, 55 Italians, 50 Englishmen, 20 Austrians, 18 Russians, 6 French, 6 Swedes, 5 Hungarians, 2 Swiss, 1 Greek, 1 Dane and 1 Hollander. The Court discovered that one of the Italians had only recently come from Sing Sing, after having served a sentence for an alleged Black Hand conspiracy. He was promptly sent away. Of the total number examined, over fifty failed to pass a satisfactory examination.

As each man presented himself, Assistant United States Attorney Charles Smith read a report of an examination made of the candidate's record by secret service men.

HARVARD MAN FELS WAITER

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 7.—At lunched by a colored waiter with a knife in the students' dining room in Memorial Hall at dinner last night, Thomas Rush Holbert, a third-year Harvard Law School man, seized a wooden chair and struck down his assailant. The dining room was filled with students, who screamed with alarm. The waiter, his name is Thomas Jones, he got a broken head and lost his job.

Holbert is the son of a ranchman in Greeley, la., and lives in Westmore Hall, the most exclusive of dormitories. After waiting a long time to-night to be served he complained to the waiter, who replied: "Wait till you get it." When Holbert then demanded immediate service, under threat of trouble, Jones rushed at the student with a carving knife and cut his hand. The knockout followed.

SEA WATER GOLD PLAN IS SPURNED BY THE CHEMISTS

Nagel's Discovery Is Turned Down by Society After Paper Is Read.

INVENTOR IS PUZZLED.

Can't Understand the Lack of Appreciation, He Declares.

It is easier to extract gold from sea water than it is to extract sympathy from the New York section of the American Chemical Society. At least that is the opinion entertained to-day by Dr. Oskar Nagel, whose heralded discovery was turned down so hard last night at Rumford Hall, No. 60 East Forty-first street, that the inventor grabbed his hat and his apparatus and rushed out into the street to shake the dust of the meeting from his feet. He would have done it, too, if it hadn't been raining.

What pestered the society first was that the doctor had talked too much. They considered this in bad form and said so. Dr. Nagel had his little demonstration plant set up on the stage. He read a fifteen-minute paper giving the general plan of his process for taking potash and gold from the ocean. He had no sooner got through than the storm clouds began to mass on the horizon.

Dr. C. A. Langmuir, chairman, demanded to be informed why Dr. Nagel had talked to the newspapers and brought in the name of the society. He explained that the society, as such, did not stand for Dr. Nagel's ability to extract anything from anything.

Dr. Charles F. McKenna moved that Dr. Nagel's paper be rejected as unscientific.

Dr. Charles Banker, of the College of the City of New York requested to be informed how much gold Dr. Nagel had wrested from the Atlantic Ocean. When Dr. Nagel replied that he had got $10 worth, the society laughed.

Dr. Morris Loeb said that he had been mortified by what he had read in the newspapers of the discovery. "Pouring water through a funnel," he said, looking at Dr. Nagel's apparatus, "is not my idea of an experiment."

"It is done in Wall street," suggested Dr. Leo Bakerland. Then the meeting voted unanimously to give Dr. Nagel's paper the official story stars.

"I do not understand this at all," said Dr. Nagel to-day. "I think—I think it was all a made-up affair on their part. I asked them to send witnesses to see the beginning of the demonstration in the afternoon, but they didn't. I can extract gold from sea water, and I can extract potash. I can extract radium, too. I do not understand why they acted so. It is very, very puzzling."

FUSION TO FIGHT ALL SUPPORTERS OF NEW CHARTER

Independent Organizations and Republicans Meet to Formulate Plans.

Determined to defeat re-election, if possible, all the city Assemblymen who voted for the Gaynor charter, representatives of half a dozen prominent civic organizations, together with a few Republicans and Independence League, gathered at the Hotel Manhattan last night and formed an organization which is to be militant in the forthcoming campaign, and which will probably bring about fusion between the Republicans and all independent organizations on Assembly nominations.

Last night's conference was called by William Jay Schiefelbusch, of the Citizens' Union; Charles O. Brown, President of the City Club; John J. Hopper, who ran for Governor on the Independence League ticket; E. H. Outerbridge, S. S. Koenig and Russell Benedict.

Finally resolutions were passed calling for the appointment of a committee of seven to arrange a programme and report back.

Tested in Two Hemispheres

IN order to prove the absolute purity, quality and durability of our Knickerbocker beer, we have had it tested by the best known beer experts in two hemispheres. The analysis printed below and the unbiased comment made by these scientists, after our beer had been shipped thousands of miles over sea and land, prove that Ruppert's Knickerbocker, "The Beer that Satisfies," is unexcelled by any brew. These reports, which speak for themselves, are only two from among many dozens that we have received from scientific stations in the United States and Europe.

No. 2558010. Executed June 18, '09.
Package cont. bottles. Sender: Mr. Jacob Ruppert, Lager Beer Brewer, New York. Brand: "Knickerbocker Beer."
100 grammes of Beer contained:

Alcohol	3.74
Extract	5.45
Acidity, computed as lactic acid	0.103
Maltose (sugar)	1.50
Therefore 100 grammes of beer extract contains:
Maltose	27.55
Original gravity, Balling of wort	12.69
Attenuation, apparent	70.4
Attenuation, real	57.0
Color	0.45

The beer which was sent to us for examination arrived in a faultless condition. There was no vestige of turbidity detected in it of any kind, nor sediment; its effervescence was remarkable and it had an agreeable aroma and pleasant taste. Taking the result of the chemical analysis as a basis it corresponds to a normally brewed and fermented lager beer. Considered biologically nothing can be said against it, as it was free from developing micro-organisms and also proved its utmost durability.

Preservatives, none; appearance transparent; taste, elegant.

GENERAL CRITICISM: The above analysis proves that this beer can only be brewed from the choicest brewing material. This beer deserves special mention for its great keeping quality, same is to-day two months old in the bottle and does not show the slightest sediment. The keeping quality of the foam is also very good. On account of these qualities and its elegant appearance and transparency this beer is deserving of an extensive popularity.
